I create endlessly. When I started my creative career, I thought I would be a functional potter and had no idea that I was an artist. Now, forty-plus years later, I work at my art constantly, as I am flooded with new ideas and artistic paths I want to explore. Some might say I am obsessive about my work, but that single-minded focus has led me to where I am today as an established successful artist.

Born in Fredericton, New Brunswick in 1959, I moved with my family to British Columbia in 1966. I am a self-taught exploratory potter and have never done anything else for a living. My works have been exhibited worldwide, but I find as I age that I am less interested in exhibiting. My greatest pleasure is in meeting the people who come to my gallery to pick out a new favourite for themselves or helping people from afar choose a piece online.
